Implementation and Development of International Environmental Law

Ecologic is providing ad hoc legal analysis and practical options for the current negotiations on the implementation and development of international environmental law, as well as on basic principles of international environmental law.

With the increase in international environmental regulations, implementation and compliance are proving problematic. Different instruments and approaches towards ensuring and facilitating implementation and compliance have been developed. Among these new instruments are public participation, information rights, conflict avoidance and conciliation mechanisms. These instruments exhibit common elements, but their implementation differs depending on the particular regime in which they are included. This project aims to further develop and adapt the instruments to new international environmental regulations.
