

Published on Ecologic Institute: Science and Policy for a Sustainable World
(<https://www.ecologic.eu>)

Home > Consumer Rights in International Trade Agreements and How They Can be Enforced

PROJECT

Consumer Policy
Trade
Ecologic Legal

Consumer Rights in International Trade Agreements and How They Can be Enforced

[1]

International trade agreements can have an impact on consumers in different ways. On the one hand, they can lead to more or cheaper products to become available for consumers. On the other hand, these agreements contain rules for political and legal measures that the parties to an agreement may adopt; this can limit the scope for regulation in favour of consumers. How trade agreements are designed is therefore important for consumers. In this project, Ecologic Institute compiles a study for the Federation of German Consumer Organisations, analysing how consumer rights are addressed in international trade agreements and how they can be enforced by consumer organisations.

Main Link

[Study on Consumer Rights in International Trade Agreements \[German\]](#)

Related Articles

- The Enforcement of Consumer Rights in Trade Agreements
- Consumer Rights in International Trade Agreements
- Regulatory Cooperation under CETA
- Regulatory Cooperation under TTIP - a Risk for Democracy and National Regulation?
- TTIP und Klimawandel - Risiko oder Chance?
- Investor-state Dispute Settlement under TTIP - a Risk for Environmental Regulation?

Funding

Federation of German Consumer Organisations (vzbv), Germany

Partner

Ecologic Institute, Germany

Partner

Christian Pitschas, Switzerland

Team

Dr. Christiane Gerstetter

Team

Lena Donat, LL.M.

Duration

September 2016 to December 2016

Project ID

3503

Keywords

consumers, trade agreements, CETA, TPP, WTO dispute resolution

Source URL (modified on 08/22/2018 - 20:00): <https://www.ecologic.eu/14433>

Links

[1] https://www.ecologic.eu/sites/files/project/2017/fotoliac_flashpics_1_02.jpg