

Climate Talk

[1]

Climate Talk is a platform for experts to discuss the current political, legal and economic issues surrounding climate protection on a regular basis. Selected climate protection experts from ministries and agencies, businesses, associations, unions, NGOs, law firms, consultancies, and academia are invited.

Climate Talk offers participants the opportunity to exchange information and personal opinions regardless of professional interests or public opinion and to discuss possible solutions. They participate in their personal, not in their official capacity. The aim of this informal exchange is to provide a platform for an expert dialogue, rather than a platform for an exchange of well-known positions.

Climate Talks are held under the Chatham House Rule (participants may make use of information received from a person or organization but may not identify the source of information).

Climate Talks take place in the early evening and lasts for about two hours.
