Conference on

GREEN DEVELOPMENT AND GOVERNANCE INNOVATION:

PROSPECTS ON THE RIO+20 SUMMIT

Shanghai, 17-18 April 2012

Venue: SIIS

Global crises are posing greater challenges to people's life and even threaten human existence. Population growth, shortage of resources, energy crisis, food crisis - worldwide environmental problems are emerging with the deepening of globalization. These issues are interwoven, interplaying and cross-border and are taking a toll on the existence and development of human beings. Twenty years ago, the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro for the first time discussed environmental and developmental issues in a broad international framework. It produced the notion of "sustainable development" taking into account the three dimensions of economic, environmental and social sustainability, which again, was reinforced in the 2002 Johannesburg Declaration at the World Summit on Sustainable Development. Furthermore, the 2002 Summit pushed the international political willingness towards more specific action plans to foster sustainable development.

Collective efforts on the local, the regional and the global level as well as genuine commitments both by the Global South and North are crucial to address major sustainable development issues such as pollution, climate change, energy conservation and emission reduction. The energy-water-food nexus centring on climate changes presents a huge challenge to all human beings and needs global cooperation between developed and developing countries. Furthermore, many developing countries at the industrialization stage face the risk of following a resource-intensive development path, heavily relying on fossil energy sources. In order to support developing countries in the transition to a green economy, which decouples energy consumption from growth, further technical and financial assistance needs to be provided by the international community.

Overall, since 1992 achievements in combating or mitigating environmental problems have been modest. Hence, the objective of Rio+20 is to assure renewed political commitment for sustainable development, to assess the progress to date and the remaining gaps in the implementation of the outcomes of major summits on sustainable development, and to address new and emerging challenges. The Rio+20 Summit will focus on two themes: a green economy in the context of sustainable development and poverty eradication; and the institutional framework for sustainable development.

Based on those two themes of Rio+20, our conference aims to improve and deepen understandings on the key issues and key areas of governance innovation and green development. It will explore the opportunities and challenges of sustainable development for developed and developing countries. It will also seek policy recommendations for future common actions and collaborations, with a direct input towards the forthcoming Rio+20 Summit.
